Social and political worries in his works abundantly show that he has been an incredible admirer and supporter of Mahatma Gandhi. He upholds Gandhi's rule of peacefulness however he has an inside and out various methodology towards abstinence. Chastity is an issue Gandhiji followed for the duration of his life while Khushwant Singh is in conflict with Gandhi's refutation of sex however he leaves it on close to home wish of an individual and he, when all is said and done, has commended sex in his books. Being a popular writer and a columnist Khushwant Singh shows extraordinary worry towards the utilization of language in correspondence. He remarks upon lavishness and use of English, Hindi, Urdu and other local dialects of India. Khushwant Singh understands the language issue justifies a genuine consideration, since an age has developed which is debilitated by absence of capability in any language.

Introduction

Khushwant Singh's pre-occupation in his vocation with journals developed into well known allure. His studies are genuinely a reflection of his time, showing up as narrative of occasions and individuals around him. His diaries incorporate spots, travelogs and profiles of individuals he met during his lifetime. He expounds on the spots he has visited. Some are wonderful spots of recorded significance or not so significant like Patna, Bombay, Syria, Germany and Amritsar. He portrays the spot in such a way that it makes an image in the personalities of perusers - fortunate or unfortunate. Khushwant Singh excessively ventured out to the quantity of spots all throughout the planet over the span of editorial profession and he presents the record of his movements in his sections and studies. Being position in post-pioneer mode Khushwant Singh seldom adheres to the one spot that he is depicting. He regularly takes off at a digression from the portrayal of a spot to angles like economy, history, culture and surprisingly singular journals. Khushwant Singh has capacity to relate the contemporary issues with his own insight and he turns nostalgic about the spots, individuals and occasions of his young days. He is momentous for his incredible scope of involvement, which offers an extraordinary assortment of setting, character and impact.

Kundu, Rama, (2016) In the larger universe of Indian writing related to English by considering the contribution of female was substantial. In study, it is noted that Indian Writers related to English like Salman Rushdie, Amite Gosh and Anita Desai have made a mark at the global level. In firmament as writers writing in their second language the growth recently has been substantial.

Siddha Murthy is perhaps unique in that she comes from a technology space which has made India famous for its IT industry. Though not a full time professional Siddha Murthy was amongst the earliest women to enter the male preserve of the IT sector. Her writing style though simple from a purely literary perspective has captured the imagination of the readers. This study endeavours to critically review her style as a connected writer with aim to make a difference with a didactic style that leaves an indelible impression. Women in developing societies succeed despite the system. Often conflicted between roles at home and desire to shape their own aspirations Women have often tried to bridge the gap with plan. That is not take it away from poor women for whom work is not about aspirations but survival, their own and their children too. Today, the works of Kamala Mark Andaya, Nay Antara Saga, Anita Desai, Goethe Hari Haran, & so on had left related to indelible imprint in relation with readers as Indian fiction specially of English.

Anthony, (2011) discussed about post-independence period related to women novelists as First Generation of mid 30's such as Mulch Raj Anand and Raja Rao. He belongs to a part with middle class Brahmin in consideration with second generation emigrants in relation with rural Madras. His full name is Rasipuram Krishnaswamy Narayan. R. stands for his village Rasipuram, K stands for his father Krishnaswamy and Narayan stands for Narayanswamy. Narayan's father was the Head Master in Mysore. He was the stern and disciplined head master and R.K Narayan grew up at the very small-town.

* Associate Professor, Government College for Women, Karnal, Haryana, India.

Before becoming the pioneer Indian writer in English, R.K. Narayan made a hard struggle to make a living by doing odd jobs such as a journalist. Then he gave his attempts of becoming a Railway Officer and a Bank officer. Thus R.K. Narayan had considerable personal problems. However, Graham Greene, a reputed British novelist inspired him and introduced his first one novel entitled Swami & Friends for Western readers since 1935. Then he became famous as a pure artist, writing in 'admirably plain English' for the sake of 'Art for Art Sake'. He is famous as a novelist, short-story, writer and the writer of retold stories, memoirs, travelogues and essays.

Social Scenario

Khushwant Singh met and interfaced with countless individuals that incorporates government officials, litterateurs, film big names, social laborers, companions and family members, strict masters, everyday citizens, associates, columnists, separatists, academicians and rationalists. A portion of individuals he has met have an enduring impact at the forefront of his thoughts. In his sections, he gives an exuberant record of a portion of these. He can depict the character of the concerned people in such a style that they come to us perfectly healthy as three-dimensional characters. Khushwant Singh's reactions and remarks on characters target arriving at the humanistic ideal. His innovative craftsmanship is engrossed, less with the individual but rather more a secluded element or with society.

He attempts to keep the equilibrium of sociological show and the temperance of social examination. Khushwant Singh holds appreciation for the individuals who not exclusively can accomplish a harmony among over a wide span of time, yet additionally put their thoughts in real life. He respects pioneers like Mahatma Gandhi, Jawaharlal Nehru and Indira Gandhi. He depicts the inward clash and qualities winning in the contemporary political situation. Notwithstanding, there are predispositions in his decision of political occasions and pioneers. He picks a couple of pioneers more than once and expounds on them in his section especially individuals from Nehru-Gandhi family. The media furnishes their crowd with a stock of data, pictures, stories and impressions, here and there as per expected requirements, now and again guided by its own motivations. This reality will consistently be somewhat chosen and built and there will be sure predispositions. This shows that Khushwant Singh as a writer doesn't reflect reality; he channels and shapes the data he gets past genuine encounters; and also, he focuses on a couple of issues and subjects that drives general society to see those issues as more significant than different issues.

Khushwant Singh's pre-occupation with big names isn't an amazing thing. Having been in the main part of political activity in the country for over sixty years, he approached the majority of the political entertainers in present day India. His remarks on them uncover his eccentricities, different preferences, a trademark, which places him in the world of post-innovator scholars for whom full of feeling enthusiasm for people is a higher priority than ideational one.

Despite the fact that perusers for beginning random data news-casting in Indian editorial scene credit Khushwant Singh, yet it frames just miniscule segment of the whole editorial works by him. Khushwant Singh relates inconsequential issues to his and perusers' normal life so that they appear to be especially pertinent to the perusers. The scope of inconsequential topics changes from creatures to disappointment of light, from pleasure in pedicure to challenge for appalling looking creatures. Khushwant Singh has for quite a long time governed in the personalities of perusers as the expert of random data. However, a cautious examination of his sections and studies as attempted in the investigation uncovers the sparse consideration he pays to random data.

Conclusion

Found in entirety, Khushwant Singh arises as a humanist who likes to move toward life from the pit of his heart than the cerebellum. His anxiety for the human qualities, fairness and pride of human existence is communicated in a style that will in general occupy consideration from the issues being talked about and redirect thoughtfulness regarding the trivial items. Subsequently, making a misinterpretation in the personalities of the perusers about his pre-occupations as a writer. Be that as it may, his style is the actual quintessence of his composition and his height as a columnist as it assists with shocking individuals out of their apparent thoughts and take to his works like a fish takes to water. Indeed, his style is celebratory and post-pioneer immediately. Indeed, one of the signs of post-pioneer composing is that it commends the fragmentary and the 'fractional'. Khushwant Singh's compositions give plentiful proof of this celebratory tone which now and again even lines on the clamorous and boisterous, something that associates him to the local soil of Punjab, which is popular for its bohemian demeanor to life.

"Is it true that you are an Indian first and a Punjabi or Sikh second? Or on the other hand is it the alternate path round? I don't care for the manner in which those inquiries are outlined. I'm every one of the three simultaneously. On the off chance that I was denied my Punjabiness or my local area custom, I would decline to call myself Indian. I'm Indian, Punjabi and Sikh. Also, even so I have a devoted family relationship to one who says I am 'Indian, Hindu and Haryanvi' or 'I'm Indian, Moplah Muslim and Malayali' or 'I'm Indian, Christian and Assamese'. I need to hold my strict and etymological personality without in any capacity making them restrictive.

"I'm persuaded that in our ensured variety is our solidarity as a country. When you attempt to wreck territorial dialects for one 'public' language or religion, for the sake of somebody Indian philosophy, you will obliterate the solidarity of the country. Twice was our Indianness tested: in 1962 by the Chinese; in 1965 by the Pakistanis. At that point, notwithstanding our numerous distinctions of language, religion and confidence, we rose as one to protect our country. In a definitive examination, it is the awareness of the outskirts that makes a country. We have demonstrated that we are one country.
